

THE 4400

TOM AND DIANA INVESTIGATE A MYSTERIOUS STRUCTURE BEING BUILT AT A PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL, BASED ON THE DRAWINGS OF ONE OF THE PATIENTS WHO'S A 4400, IN THE SPECIAL TWO-HOUR SEASON PREMIERE OF "THE 4400," SUNDAY, JUNE 5

"Wake Up Call" (# 7 & 8). One year after the events on Highland beach revealed that the 4400 were taken and returned by future humans, the world is a much different place in "Wake Up Call," in the two hour second season premiere of THE 4400, Sunday June 5 (9:00 PM – 11:00 PM, ET/PT). Ira Steven Behr, one of the series' executive producers, and Craig Sweeny wrote the episode directed by Leslie Libman.

NTAC agent Tom Baldwin has been riding a desk job for the past twelve months, penance for his acts of insubordination, despite the fact that they were key in unlocking the mystery behind the 4400. Kyle, Tom's son, has been living under observation at NTAC, where he has endured numerous tests, revealing no new information. Diana Skouris, Tom's partner, appeals to Nina Jarvis, the new head of the Pacific Northwest Division of NTAC, to reinstate Tom in the field. On a personal note, Diana has adopted Maia Rutledge as her daughter, unaware that the girl still has precognitive insights. Meanwhile, Richard, Lily and their baby Isabelle, now six months old, are living in a mountain cabin hiding from Jordan Collier and NTAC. Collier has become the self-proclaimed figurehead of the 4400 and is on the verge of opening the first "4400 Center," a place not only for fellow returnees, but regular everyday people looking to "unlock" the 4400 within themselves. And Shawn Farrell has left his family behind to become Collier's protégé, using his healing ability to bring in big money contributors to the center.

NTAC gets a call from Abenson Psychiatric Hospital, where Tess Doerner, a 4400 paranoid schizophrenic, seems to have taken some sort of mind control over the institution's orderlies and inmates. Upon his release from NTAC, Kyle is determined to "deprogram" Shawn and rescue him from Collier's clutches. And Richard and Lily are forced to flee their home when a religious zealot believes their baby, Isabelle, is the devil and must be destroyed.
