A REACCURING DREAM KEEPS ALLISON FROM GETTING SLEEP AND BEGINS TO INTERFERE WITH HER LIFE AND HER JOB

“The Other Side of the Tracks” #005—When the same dream wakes Allison up night after night, she begins to believe that it is brought on by stress and not a vision. However, when she meets a doctor that is studying psychics, she discovers that her dream was his real nightmare on, MEDIUM, Monday, March 21, 2005 (10:00-11:00 PM, ET/PT) on NBC. Eric Laneuville directed the episode written by Chris Dingess.

After overhearing a doctor defend the ability of psychics, Joe suggests that Allison go speak with him about her powers, and especially her new dream. At first, Allison is wary of exposing herself to the doctor, but when the lack of sleep begins to interfere with her job she decides to give it a shot. Meanwhile, at work Devalos is desperate to find the murderer of a popular councilman, but is convinced the fourteen year-old boy who confessed is not the real killer.

To prove her abilities to the doctor, Allison participates in a series of psychic “tests,” and fails. However, when she tells the doctor about her dream he believes Allison is playing a cruel joke on him. Allison learns that her dream was this doctor’s personal childhood experience. When the doctor realizes that Allison knew private details about the event, he apologizes for his reaction and asks Allison for her help in solving his family mystery. After figuring out her dream, Allison is able to focus on work again, but as fate would have it, her vision that would prove the fourteen year-old boy’s innocence comes a few hours too late.
